

Parents of The Groom Role

What exactly is the role?

The parents of the groom are normally the least involved members, but that doesn't necessarily have to be. Tradition states that the brides parents pay towards a large proportion of the wedding costs but these days everyone is well too aware how expensive it can be so both sets of parents may wish to distribute the costs more evenly. Maybe the bride and groom may offer to contribute too.

Parents of the groom can do more than just help out with finances. As a gesture, the grooms parents may want something specific they can be involved in. As with the other roles with helping out, the key again is to make sure that everyone gets a long for a start. Make sure to communicate with one another so everyone is clear as to what needs doing so there is absolutely no confusion. The last thing the happy couple want is a big rift between both sets of parents to the running up of the wedding.
